Under Texas family law, a SAPCR is automatically applied to a divorce filing when the divorce involves a child or multiple children. It begins with a petition filed in family court that requests that the judge issue orders regarding child custody, visitation rights, child support, and/or medical support from a parent. If married parents have separated and the need arises to define conservatorship for the child or children involved in the separation, a SAPCR can be filed. A SAPCR can also be filed when the parents of a child or children are not married to each other and there is a need to legally establish or "adjudicate" the parent-child relationship for the children and their parents. SAPCR petitions can only affect children and are not used to address any other legal matters between two adults outside of the needs of the child or children

A Suit Affecting the Parent-Child Relationship (SAPCR) case asks a judge to make a custody, visitation, child support, medical support, and dental support order for your child
